Another Speech.
The Richmond Dispatch gives the following report of the speech of Lewis Lindsey, in the Virginia Convention, on the resolution "that the Bill of Rights be made the first article of the Constitution."

During the discussion which ensued Lewis Lindsey addressed the Convention. He did not display in his remarks his usual ability; so that we do not consider him worthy, in this instance, of a verbatim report.

He thought that the gentleman from Norfolk had struck de point on de head, and was prepared to look into de subject more fully. He was afraid that de Convention would not give de subject before dem time enough to consider de ideas proposed. He was afraid, unless dey did so, dar purposes would be lost.

Is perfectly aware, sir, what Constitution we propose to embody. I know all about it. Dar is no necessity for de proposition of slavery to be talked about, but to give solely de rights to those who have been taken from. Everybody knows dat class; and I think we can derive at de principle of dar rights expediently better by looking more fully into de legislative branch of our proceedings. Dar branch, although the minor branch of the fundamental branch, will bring home every idea, and will not allow de rights of dat class which I represents to be ignored.

He represented de choice of de people—de people, at least, what put him in de ballot to come here—and he wanted to claim for dat class equal rights before de law. He thought that in consequence of de necessity of giving dis class dar rights dar ought not to be any hurry, but dat every proposition ought to have two days foregone consideration before de proper action was taken. Therefore he was entirely opposed to hurry.

I am satisfied, Mista President, dat dose gentlemen who so says are satisfied wid dis reconstruction military arbitrament of de sword; but, sah, de monopoly shan't rule in dis house. De majority, and not de monopoly, must rule. I comes here for de rights of my race. I has perceived dat some of de gentlemen has gone back on dar promise to say dat I derives at dar idea, because when dey made dose promises dey did not have de ballot in dar hands; and as dey has since received dat ballot, dey say dey didn't make dose promises. I wants to stand here and advocate de rights of my race; for dat class who put me here will not be satisfied unless I do so.

He continued for some moments on de subject of rights. In conclusion, he said:
I differ very much wid de outside idea (suppose to be Butler's) dat we must go thoo in a great hurry, and I don't think my voters would be willin to observe it. I has been sittin here quietly, Mr. President, to see if I couldn't qualify what was goin widout sayin a word; but as I had noticed a disposition to hurry thoo de work, I has risen to speak against it. Lewis was called to order, and asked to confine himself to de subject under debate several times, but without avail.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—The following pithy description of young belles and beaux of a century ago, will compare not unfavorably with their counterparts of the present day, who may be seen perambulating our principal thoroughfares from morning till night. As this description is, however, more applicable to a bridal occasion, it will not suit the present fashions in every particular. To begin with the lady. Her locks were strained upwards over an immense cushion that set like an incubus upon her head, and plastered over with pomatum, and then sprinkled with a shower of white powder. The height of this tower was somewhat over a foot. One single white rosebud lay on its top, like an eagle on a haystack. Over her neck and bosom was folded a lace handkerchief, fastened in front by a bosom-pin rather larger than a dollar, containing her grandfather's miniature set in virgin gold. Her airy form was braided up in a satin dress, the sleeves as tight as the natural skin of the arm, with a waist formed by a bodice, worn outside, from whence the skirt flowed off, and was distended at the top by an ample hoop. Shoes of white kid, with peaked toes, and heels of two or three inches elevation, inclosed her feet, and glittered with spangles as her little pedal members moved curiously out. Now for the swain. His hair was sleeked black, and plentifully beflowed, while his one projected like the handle of a skillet. His coat was a sky-blue silk, lined with yellow; his long vest of white satin, embroidered with gold lace; his breeches of the same material, and tied at the knees with pink ribbon. White silk stockings and pumps, with laces and ties of the same hue, completed the habiliments of his nether limbs. Lace ruffles clustered around his wrist, and a portocuanzo frill, worked in correspondence, and bearing the miniature of his beloved, finished his truly genteel appearance.

A good story is told of one of the baggage masters of an important station between Worcester and Boston, a fat, good natured, droll fellow, whose jokes have become quite popular on the road. His name is Bill. A few mornings since, while in the performance of his duties in changing baggage, an ugly little Scotch terrier got in his way, and he gave him a smart kick which sent him over the track, yelping. The owner of the dog soon appeared in high dudgeon, wanting to know why he kicked the dog.

"Was that your dog?" asked Bill, with his usual drawl.
"Certainly it was, what right have you to kick him?"
"He's mad," said Bill.
"No, he's not mad, either," said the owner. "Well, I should be, if anybody kicked me in that way," responded Bill.
